Intuitive Machines Selected by L3Harris to Support SDA Proliferated Warfighter Space Architecture Tranche 3 Tracking Layer

March 2, 2026

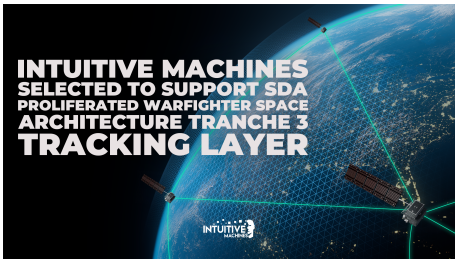

HOUSTON, March 03, 2026 (GLOBE NEWSWIRE) -- Intuitive Machines, Inc. (Nasdaq: LUNR) (“Intuitive Machines” or the “Company”), a leading space technology, infrastructure, and services company, today announced Lanteris Space Systems, a wholly owned subsidiary of Intuitive Machines, was selected by L3Harris Technologies (NYSE: LHX) to support the development and production of spacecraft platforms for the Space Development Agency (“SDA”) Tranche 3 Tracking Layer of the Proliferated Warfighter Space Architecture.

Under this selection, Intuitive Machines will design, build and deliver 18 advanced spacecraft platforms to help enable the next generation of space-based missile tracking capabilities. This effort supports the SDA mission to deliver persistent, real-time tracking of advanced missile threats, including hypersonic and ballistic systems.

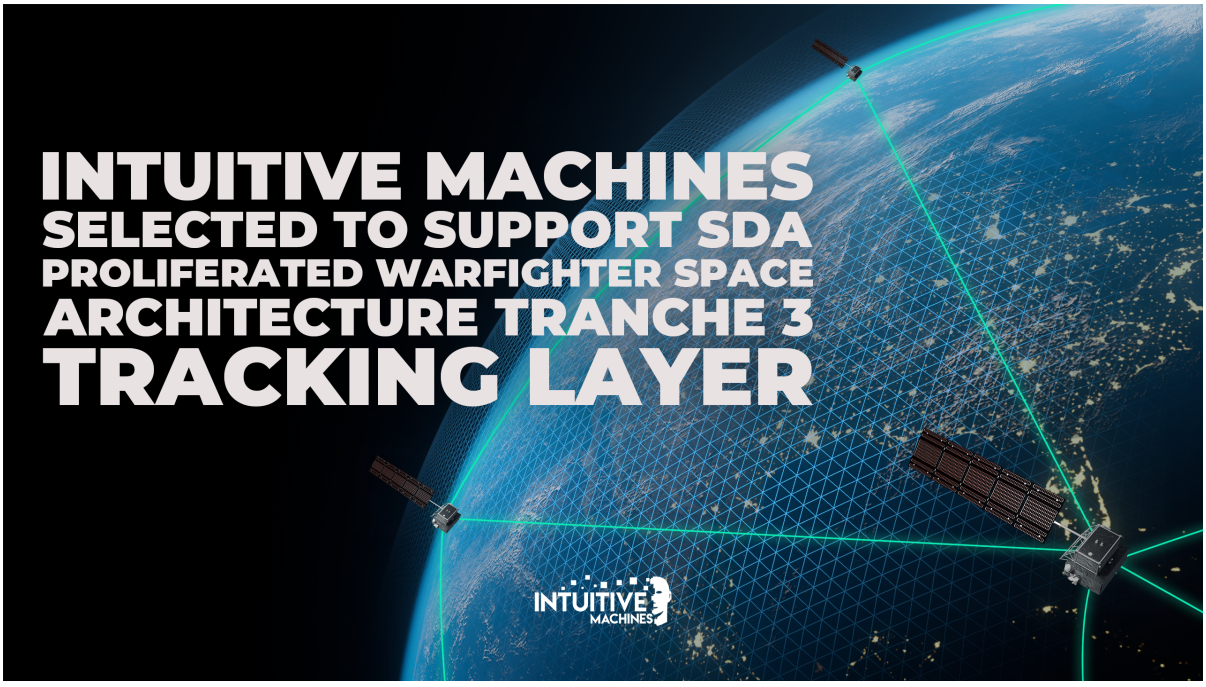

“This builds on a foundation of proven performance and mission trust earned through previous tracking layer selections that we look forward to carrying forward with L3Harris and the Space Development Agency,” said Intuitive Machines CEO, Steve Altemus. “Intuitive Machines is focused on building spacecraft platforms and the systems needed to sustain missions persistently and at scale, as part of complex mission architectures, including the SDA Tranche 3 Tracking Layer program.”

The Tranche 3 Tracking Layer enhances the SDA ability to integrate higher performance sensing and on-orbit data processing, contributing to a resilient, layered space architecture that delivers broader global coverage and improved responsiveness for defense and allied users.
